Calling all citizen journalists and broadcast interns

Fox News needs some help gathering the news.

And it's looking to its viewers for help. Fox News introduced Monday a way for users to upload their pictures and videos online. If the producers find them newsworthy, they'll make it onto the air.

Meanwhile, Katie Couric is looking for a summer intern for the CBS Evening News -- online, of course.

Now through April 6, prospective interns can submit their stories online, as well as vote, rate and comment on their competitors' submissions and Couric's coverage.

Specifically, the candidates have to put together a story on one of three topics: climate change, a profile of someone with the "American Spirit" or a profile of an Iraq War veteran.

Both sites are using Neighborhood America's technology to run the site.

Now for the fine print: The intern won't get paid. The intern also has to be a college student, one who has enough money to pay her or his way to New York and live there for 10 weeks. Hopefully CBS will at least spring for lunch at Subway sometime during the internship.
